We conduct this On-Premise research in six of the world's top seven markets for imported wine as well as South Africa, New Zealand and Australia where we started thirteen years ago.

This is now the second consecutive year that we have undertaken this research into the New Zealand On-Premise market enabling us, for the first time, to measure change over time and the overall direction of the market.

With COVID 19 shutdowns having had such a devastating effect on the hospitality sector globally, New Zealand stands out as one of the few markets operating, comparatively, normally throughout this period.

But what would you be getting yourself into, if you are not already selling in this market? Could you do better if you already are?

Those are just some of the key questions that this report seeks to answer.

The Purpose of this Research

The primary purpose of the On-Premise distribution effort is to attain listings. That is what WBS's 'Wine On-Premise New Zealand 2021' measures. To do this, we use over 36,000 individual listings on wine lists (by-the-glass, by-the-bottle etc) in total, 18,000 each taken during the same period in 2020 and 2021.

We'll look at who the best distributors are, what the most listed wine brands and styles are, the performance of supplier countries and regions, what restaurants charge and how much wine business owners and distributors can expect to make from On-Premise sales.

Why are On-Premise listings so important?

- People buy what they try.
- It enables your wine to be seen and consumed in the best possible surroundings.
- It is a chance for you to be remembered, recommended and bought again, later.
- It is one of the only true 'brand building' opportunities many wineries ever experience.

About the Sample

This survey covers the full range of possible On-Premise wine consumption occasions including suburban restaurants, fine dining, hotels, pubs and clubs etc.

Our sample of wine lists used is drawn completely at random but in proportion to the New Zealand population. A fresh random sample is taken each year.

Our objective is to accurately reflect what the consumer sees when presented with a wine list anywhere in New Zealand and to provide commentary on how that is changing over time.

At a minimum, we require 95% confidence that we have less than 4% error. We would achieve this if each list in the survey had only one supplier. As each New Zealand restaurant now works with an average of 8 supplier companies, we can do better than that when we are discussing gross numbers, such as national distribution and the performance of regions, countries and wine styles.

Naturally, when we start breaking the database down into smaller segments, we lose some of this accuracy. We are careful not to claim any insight beyond what reliable data confirms. With 13 years spent analysing this type of data taken using consistent methodology, we can quickly identify, correct or explain anomalies.

How big is the market?

Altogether, 10.4 Million 9 litre cases of wine were sold in New Zealand last year. Of that, 3 Million cases or 22% is consumed in the On-Premise. This is higher than most other developed markets including Australia, Germany, the UK and USA that sit at around 17-19%. Another major difference between New Zealand and other On-Premise markets is that even though New Zealand imports 44% of its wine consumption, only 28% of listings, according to this research, are imports. Unlike other wine producing countries that we measure that tend to import fine wine, New Zealand's imports are weighted towards the lower end.

As around 85% of the volume of wine sold in the Off-Premise achieves less than $16 per bottle, (according to Aztec IRI) and virtually no wine listings in the NZ On-Premise are at the restaurant equivalent of those prices, about half of premium wine producers' wholesale opportunity is in the On-Premise.

The Sugar Club

The key question then becomes how best to address this most important opportunity for wine producers? Who are the best distributors, which are the best paths to market, what are the most popular wines styles, which regions / countries / brands / suppliers are having the most success and how much money is there to be made from On-Premise sales?
